Recalls Two Other Murders.

The sentencing of William Fairbanks to imprisonment for life for the murder of Mrs. Mary Grout recalls two other murders tracing back to the little town of Grafton. In 1895, James Mitchell, who came from Waterbury, Conn., shot and killed Mrs. Laura Rankin, a waitress. The case had similar features to that of Fairbanks and the Grout girl. Mitchell pleaded guilty to murder in the second degree and is serving a life sen-tence at Windsor. In 1876 Solon Woolley, a resident of Grafton, shot and killed his brother, Frank. He was tried and convicted of murder in the second declared insane and removed from Windsor to the state hospital for the insane at Waterbury.
